

Other communications technologies...

Chat

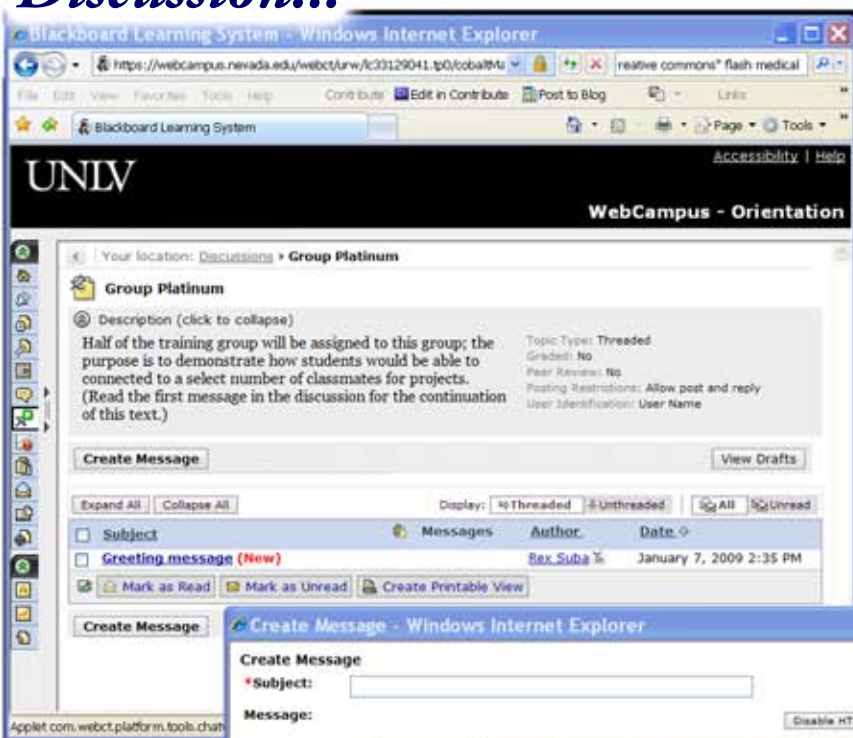

Skype and other VOIP (Voice over IP) technologies may be used by certain instructors for virtual office hours, group and class meetings, etc.

A headset, microphone and/or webcam may be employed.

Your individual instructor will provide course-specific information on how support & assistance will be provided, as direct support for non-WebCampus-tools is not provided by the Office of Distance Education at this time.

Discussion...

WebCampus Email...

For maximum confidentiality when emailing your course instructor, please only select that instructor's name from the list of recipients rather than the "roles."

EOM ("End of Message")

If you are asking if something was received by an instructor in your course's email, you may receive a message self-contained in the subject line ending with the text of "EOM". This is for efficiency and is not intended to be rude. It is meant to indicate that all has been communicated through this line and that another response is not expected for that thread.

Official UNLV communications, including notices about upcoming Distance Education course evaluations (including Nursing courses) & general emergency alerts, are only sent to UNLV student RebelMail accounts. If you don't wish to specifically monitor through RebelMail itself, you must set-up the available forwarding option to send any received notes. UNLV staff have been instructed not to use non-RebelMail for departmental/college communications (non-teaching staff do not have access to WebCampus course email accounts).